Protect Yourself from Identity Theft in 2019

Identity theft is a crime that is always stressful, often extremely complicated, and sometimes expensive to resolve. Here are seven ways to help protect yourself and your important data.

1. Secure Papers and Cards. Keep important files in a safe and shred financial documents that aren't needed. Protect your physical credit and identification cards by carrying your wallet in a safe place and checking that you have all your cards and IDs at the end of the day.
2. Examine Financial Statements. Review your financial statements regularly to keep track of financial habits and to alert you of fraudulent activity.
3. Choose Good Passwords. Having one simple password for all the devices and platforms you use is convenient, but dangerous. Using multiple, complex passwords may be more difficult, but a password manager service can help.
4. Protect Computers. Use a reputable antispyware program to make sure your hardware is safe from invaders. You can also protect your data by encrypting the hard drive.
5. Be Cautious of Suspicious Emails and Websites. Suspicious looking emails and websites could be a security risk. Look out for ones that ask for personal information or that want you to download or install software.
6. Use Two-Factor Identification. Two-factor identification for email and important online accounts gives you an extra layer of protection.
7. Secure Your Wi-Fi and Avoid Public Wi-Fi. Avoid using public Wi-Fi for online banking or any site that requires a password login. Be sure to secure your own home Wi-Fi with a unique and hard-to-guess password.
